

Photos by Matthew Lewis—The Washington Post

The Claude Jones group rocks out at the British Embassy.

THE 'JONES' BOYS AT THE EMBASSY

The sartorially correct British, who gave the world the Beatles, let down their hair again at the British Embassy reception on Tuesday night, following the opening of St. Alban's Repertory Theatre (SART).

After Ambassador and Mrs. John Freeman had formally welcomed their guests—he in black tie and she in a flowing gown of Indian material—the place really rocked.

The music was provided by an orchestra of local talent, which calls itself "Claude Jones." The real Claude Jones neither plays, sings nor directs the orchestra. But he lends his name and sets the style, with beard, blue jeans and bare feet. Members of the five-man group dress in variations of this style.

Girl friends who went along to watch the group perform had long hair, wore long floating mumus, and were barefooted.

—Dorothy McCardle